FlightWorks Acquires Colorado Company, Expands Fleet Offering

To further expand market service and add diversity to its growing fleet, FlightWorks acquired Mountain Aviation of Colorado.

KENNESAW, GA – September 7, 2007. FlightWorks, a leading full service aviation management and charter company, recently acquired Mountain Aviation, an aircraft management and charter company based in Broomfield, Colorado. The acquisition includes executive facilities, a 40,000 sq ft hangar, and approximately 11 managed aircraft, bringing FlightWorks fleet to more than 40 aircraft.

“This is a wonderful opportunity and a logical acquisition because it marries two like-minded companies. Clients of both companies will benefit as we expand full services into the west. The acquisition clearly fits our strategic plan - to offer the best aviation services and solutions and deliver on that promise through the continued development of an efficient and cost-effective framework,” states Scott Beale, President and CEO. “Our goal, now, is to assure our new customers and our existing customers that we can execute a seamless transition – quickly, efficiently, and to the benefit of all parties – charter clients, management clients and our shared employees.”

The companies will gradually blend their service offerings and management professionals. Rich Bjelkevig, CEO at Mountain Aviation, said, “We are delighted with this acquisition and look forward to partnering with FlightWorks employees and clients as we merge into one family.”

FlightWorks is strategically increasing its fleet size through its charter management program, FlightWise™. The program provides a cost effective opportunity for corporations and aircraft owners to lower aircraft ownership costs and generate revenue by certifying their aircraft for FlightWorks Part 135 charter operations. The addition of newer, well-maintained executive jets enables FlightWorks to meet the increasing demand for their charter service.
